This guide will show you how to use both Windows and macOS versions of Elements 2020, so if you have a Windows PC and a Mac, this guide should help you get started with both computers. If you have a Mac with macOS Mojave, then some of the steps might work differently. How to create a new project in Elements 2020 Step 1 - Open Adobe Elements and create a new project This step is easy. You can find it just like you did in previous versions. At the bottom-left of the desktop you should see your opened projects. If you don't see it, press Cmd + Shift + N or just go to Window > Projects. One thing I want to point out in the upper left corner in the New Project window is the Library icon. You can use this window to open both the Photo Library and the Projects Library. You can start a new project in either library. I'd recommend you select the Photo Library as the default location for your photos, though. You can always change this option in the Elements Preferences once you start working with photos, but this is the default setting for photos in Elements. You can also have multiple projects open at the same time, but I like to have just one active project for now so I won't confuse myself. Step 2 - Pick where to save the project When you create a new project in Elements, the files are saved in a folder on your computer called My Projects. You can easily create more projects by right-clicking on the 388ed7b0c7

Q: Renaming columns in Tableau I have a data set that has the names of properties that I need to rename before it is loaded into Tableau. I have the column names in a separate table, as such: Old Column Name Google Yahoo New Column Name Withers The Drews Is there a way to use the Tableau Split Column function to change the name of the column as it loads it into Tableau without having to manually do it in the sheet in each instance? A: Yes. Basically, for each old column name, I run this in an SOQL query in my data extension, based on the current row: SELECT R[Old_Column_Name] as New_Column_Name from Old_Table_Name Then, I use the SOQL Split Column function and drag the old column name into the sheet. This new column name is set as the new column name. Ghost-hunters and investigators from all over the world come to find the truth about those frozen landscapes and one of them is my husband, Mark. On February 12th, 2017 Mark and I were at a cemetery in Chantilly, VA investigating what's called the Monocacy Valley Cemetery. The Monocacy Valley is an extremely large and old cemetery that's located in the Foggy Bottom neighborhood of Washington, D.C. Several years ago I helped Mark lay out the research for an article that he was working on about this area. I actually did a lot of research for this article and there are many points of interest throughout the cemetery that are still active. It's a place that has a history of several infamous stories. It's connected to the founding of our nation and there's even an area that's still a national military cemetery. There's also an area of the cemetery that has the highest concentration of active
