Database Retrofit with Firebase Realtime Database. It works fine. Firebase ref.addValueEventListener(new ValueEventListener() {...}) But I have a question. I know that Firebase Realtime Database cache the data, but does Firebase Storage cache the data too? Saving and retrieving object using below code. DatabaseReference ref =

FirebaseDatabase.getInstance().getReference(); DocumentReference

documentReference = ref.push(); String documentID = documentReference.getId(); documentReference.getRef().setValue(newTable);

Anyhow, if the user access the database and then go to Firebase Storage and read the same document, will the document be retrieved? A: When you try to get data from Firebase Storage, it is cached in the Firebase servers. If you are offline, it will be cached and you will get it as soon as you get online again. It is important to understand that you should not get data from Firebase Storage while you are not online. This is because the Firebase servers will serve the data until you decide to update the Firebase Storage data.

1. Download Crack from below link, Save crack, Edit the ELDEN RING game, copy crack from downloaded folder to INSTALL FOLDER, Save the game. 2. Run the game, Enjoy!!!! I used it to catch, kill and skin some trout. The most accurate I've gotten with mine is 30-40 yards. It's not a death grip, but the force generated by the cast really make my hands grip it solidly. It's also very durable. A small piece of the foam core was torn out but it was on my gas hook, not the tippet. I grew up fishing with a 7 weight sink tip reel and the Newegg should be about the same weight/cubic size as what I'm used to. My grandfather handed me down a 5 weight rod and a Lunker bobber that was almost as old as I was and it's still in good shape, but I haven't used it in years. I would say the rod is a little stiffer than what I'm used to (less sensitive), but you're talking about a first time fisherman maybe fishing around his first large fish, so I'd be happy with the performance out of it. I would suggest getting the rod and getting a good pre-sink tip if you want something more sensitive. Mine is a Prince Team 68 and it has a 3" tapered section that is super sensitive and should be good for the first few fish. Get used to spooling on a smaller gauge, it'll be tough to get used to reel-up. Q: Manually select tab and switch to it I am automating on a web application with Selenium using Java. I have a count of URL pages (one after another) that I need to always stay on, and that does not include the homepage, so I need to find some way to manually select an existing tab to switch to. Can't be done using Actions. Googling around didn't really help either. Any suggestions? A: I have used JSS (Java Scripting Suite) through Selenium quite a bit. You can access JSS simply by executing it on your browser: `JSS\jssor\api-reference\jssor.open(count)`; If that does not work, check that you are executing the correct JSS, and JSSor count is a number. This works with most browsers. To find the tab, try getting the selected element: XPath: `jssor_getSelectedElement`. Method 2 Alternatively, in a webbrowser, you can use the following to get the current
