2011-05-23. DG, ISO. Dental decay in children 6-9 years old: a two-year study in a semiurban community. A two-year prospective study in an urban (West Virginia) and a semiurban (Iowa) area was conducted to determine the prevalence and severity of dental decay and the presence of cavitated carious lesions and to examine intra- and inter-rater reliability and sensitivity of the visual and radiographic methods for diagnosis. The results showed that children in both study areas aged 6-9 years have a prevalence rate of dental decay of 43.2% with a 61.1% marginal decay rate. The majority of the children had both occlusal and interproximal carious lesions. Only 3.9% of the children had cavitated carious lesions and two-thirds of those had at least one root surface lesion. The intra-rater and inter-rater kappa statistics indicated moderate to good reliability and sensitivity for radiographic diagnosis of caries, but poor reliability for clinical diagnosis of caries.

The findings also indicated that the radiographic method of diagnosis of caries is more reliable for intra-oral caries diagnosis. Nurses' evaluation of delirium education: what interventions do they prefer? To determine which educational interventions nurses viewed as most effective.

Delirium is a frequent and often under-recognized complication of hospitalization and is associated with significant mortality and morbidity. Yet, little is known about nurses' preferences regarding its prevention and management. Descriptive survey study using a randomized block design (20% of subjects in each intervention group), comparing delirium education interventions that nurses had received during the past 6 months. A total of 142 acute care nurses who work in a hospital intensive care unit participated in the study. The majority of nurses (65%) received information about delirium, and most of them received information during meetings with other nurses (54.4%). Both didactic (82.6%) and interactive (71.8%) methods were considered effective. The majority 6d1f23a050
